Since July, 2005, several water-initiated cases of PAM have been identified in Spain, particularly in the southeastern part of the country, in persons with no history of travel in other endemic areas. A search for N. fowleri was conducted by using magnetic separation and a 1-step PCR method ([@R2]) on water samples (a 3-cm^ binding site of the second variable region of the antibody heavy chain alters the specificity of antibody binding to peptides. The specificity of monoclonal antibodies (mAbs) directed against human cardiac troponin I (cTnI) has been analyzed using peptides covering the C-terminal portion of the molecule. Peptides tested included the C-terminal tail (residues 99-129), the N-terminal globular head domain, and the first four modules of the myosin-binding domain. MAb TnI-2 (derived from a Mg-anodized affinity column) reacted with peptides located in the region of the sequence 122-129 and did not bind to any of the other peptides studied. To identify the minimum sequence required for binding, six peptides selected by mAb TnI-2 were chemically synthesized. The
