File size: . Burning sensation Burning sensation is a common side-effect of marijuana use. Some research indicate that a relevant subset of people may have increased sensitivity to marijuana due to differences in cannabis receptor levels. It is because of the side-effects of the cannabis itself, the oral fixation (dry mouth), the high and the euphoria that a number of marijuana smokers are trying to stop. In the United States, grass has grown more popular in recent years, with over 33.8 million Americans using cannabis and producing about $6.3 billion in 2012. Many of those Americans are trying to stop. The aim of a cannabis stopping technique is to remove the triggers for the cannabis craving, such as using it during the day or in social situations. One of the most difficult barriers for those who use cannabis, from some research, is their tendency to use cannabis in social situations. Cannabis users often have a hard time resisting the draw to social events, which are often pleasurable, especially on weekdays. Frequent cannabis use in social situations is a key factor in cannabis use-craving. Achievement of addiction treatment Marijuana is often referred to as "the gateway drug" because of its early association with hard drugs (see Prohibition). Without scientific evidence, this may be an inaccurate description because it suggests that it is more of a gateway drug to heroin and that cannabis is the responsible agent. On the contrary, the assumption that cannabis is an initial and precursor drug for hard drugs is incorrect. Research has shown that the majority of those who started using cannabis at an early age are not hooked on hard drugs. To better understand why certain individuals are more likely to become addicted to hard drugs, research is
